

My name is Peter Sells and I am a fire protection management consultant.

I am based in Mississauga, Ontario, with over 31 years' experience in firefighting, emergency management, fire service training and fire service strategic planning. During my 24-yr career with Toronto Fire Services, including 10 years as the Chief of the Toronto Fire Academy, it was part of my job responsibility to be aware of developing trends in fire protection tactics and technology.

I can state without reservation that the residential lockbox concept designed by Chris Evans is a significant development in secure access for responding firefighters. Chris has used his professional firefighting experience and technical skills to develop a secure access solution which meets the rapid on-scene needs of first responders while safeguarding the security of the property owner or resident, with accountability on all sides. Chris' design combines functionality with a very subtle physical profile which is ideal for residential applications.
